

WILDERNESS TRAVEL

Most of the micro-settings are based in a town or city, but sometimes you may wish to explore the outside world, in which case you should use these tables instead of the urban ones. You can also mix and match, "dipping in" to these tables for a scene or two when a mostly-urban adventure involves briefly traversing the wilderness.

CONSIDER THE OBJECTIVE

People rarely just wander out into the wilderness to see what they find—they almost always have a certain goal or destination in mind. Consider this objective when you're planning out the scenes.

EXPLORATION

There are many options for handling wilderness exploration. Some settings provide official maps, which you can use to determine the terrain and major landmarks, filling in any remaining details during play. Likewise, games set in the real world can use the plethora of maps available online.

Another option is to utilize free online tools to generate random maps, and apply traditional hex crawl (or point crawl) techniques to flesh out the various regions as you explore.

However, if you're only interested in the story, you can roll on the table below to determine the type of region where the current adventure takes place. There's no need for a map in this case, just focus on the points of interest, and assume your character knows roughly where they're going.
