Stories of California Ella M. Sexton, 1902 Treasure and Trouble Therewith, A Tale of California Geraldine Bonner, 2022-04-06 Excerpt The time was late August some eleven years ago The place that part of central California where on one side the plain unrolls in golden levels and on the other swells upward toward the rounded undulations of the foothills It was very hot the sky a fathomless blue vault the land dreaming in the afternoon glare its brightness blurred here and there by shimmering heat veils Checkered by green and yellow patches dotted with the black domes of oaks it brooded sleepily showing few signs of life At long intervals ranch houses rose above embowering foliage a green core in the midst of fields where the brown earth was striped with lines of fruit trees or hidden under carpets of alfalfa To the west the foothills rose in indolent curves tan colored as if clothed with a leathern hide Their hollows were filled with the darkness of trees huddled about hidden streams ribbons of verdure that wound from the mountains to the plain Farther still vision faint remote and immaculate the white peaks of the Sierra hung a painting on the drop curtain of the sky Across the landscape a parent stem of road wound branches breaking from it and meandering thread small to ranch and village It was white dusted here but later would turn red and crawl upward under the resinous dimness of pine woods to where the mining camps clung on the lower wall of the Sierra Already it had left behind the region of farms in neighborly proximity and the little towns that were threaded along it like beads upon a string Watching its eastward course one would have noticed that after it crested the first rise it ran free of habitation for miles
