Boscobel the Royal Oak: A Tale of the Year 1651 William Harrison Ainsworth, 2020-09-28 During the Civil Wars the old and faithful city of Worcester suffered severely for its devotion to the royal cause Twice was it besieged twice sacked by the Parliamentarians In 1642 the Earl of Essex marched with a large force against the place stormed and pillaged it and sent several of the wealthier citizens prisoners to London Four years later namely in 1646 the city again declared for the king and being captured by the Roundheads after an obstinate defence underwent harder usage than before Besides plundering the inhabitants the soldiers of the Commonwealth exasperated by the resistance they had encountered did much damage to the public buildings especially to the cathedral the interior of which magnificent edifice was grievously injured According to their custom the troopers stabled their horses in the aisles and converted the choir into a barrack and the chapter house into a guard room The organ was destroyed the rich painted glass of the windows broken many monuments mutilated and the ancient records preserved in the library burnt The exquisitely carved stone cross in the churchyard from the pulpit of which Latimer and Whitgift had preached was pulled down Before this John Prideaux sometime Bishop of Worcester had been deprived of his see and the dean and prebends dismissed Church of England divines having given place to Presbyterian ministers Independents and Anabaptists But notwithstanding their sufferings in the good cause the loyalty of the Worcester Cavaliers remained unshaken Heavy fines and imprisonment could not subdue their spirit To the last they continued true to the unfortunate king though any further attempt at rising was checked by the strong garrison left in charge of the city and commanded by Colonel John James one of the strictest of the Republican leaders After the terrible tragedy of Whitehall the Cavaliers of Worcester transferred their allegiance to the eldest son of the royal martyr and heir to the crown All the principal citizens put on mourning and every countenance except those of the soldiers of the garrison wore a sorrowful aspect A funeral sermon the text being Judge and avenge my cause O Lord was preached by Doctor Crosby the deprived dean to a few persons assembled secretly by night in the crypt of the cathedral and prayers were offered up for the preservation of Prince Charles and his speedy restoration to the throne The service however was interrupted by a patrol of musketeers and the dean was seized and lodged in Edgar's Tower an old fortified gate house at the entrance of the cathedral close Never had Worcester been so gloomy and despondent as at this period
