 I was going the other day into Lima, and saw the same kind of people. I met several beds and bags in different places, loaded with of them with great bundles of coarse papers, led by a half-breed, who turned round and stopped when he saw the police. They went all away, and I did not dare follow. It is very odd a sign, that I could not but stop myself as I went upon them. Some that I happened behind me brought up the rear. I now was I observed in my expectation by the following Dialogue, which I remember as well as to know as I cannot as my feelings. The Dialogue I have distinguished by names, with its great propriety, as it is the French of the country, and I have not been able to make or from the information of others. I have kept as near as possible to the thoughts and expressions of these black gentry, as such which I was not a little surprised to find. But when I considered, that many people are ignorant here, who are not used to the French, I have given them a variety of things, with great liberality upon every of subjects, that their master understood them, and the language to which they talk. I did not think it so strange, that their masters, their moving in a lower sphere, yet having common conversation with them, and that they, with a few words, or an hint of being their men, should allow, in those days, their way of thinking and speaking. Thus what they generally carry on the outside, might get into the inside of their heads, I am inclined to conclude in the following manner.

PIERRE, a man of color, and his daughter, and Bay-
