Telling Womens Lives:

Telling Women's Lives Judy Long, 1999-05 For centuries the great man format and masculine discourse of biography and autobiography have eclipsed women If we accept this history we remain ignorant of Lady Sarashina a Japanese woman of the Heian period whose book survives from the 11th century We overlook Margaret Cavendish and Dame Julian two early English autobiographers And we fail to consider sufficiently slave narratives oral histories or lesbian coming out stories Telling Women's Lives assesses existing traditions of autobiography and biography in search of a method capable of conveying the distinctive content of women's lives while retaining the tenor of feminine subjectivity Drawing on feminist research methodologies of the past two decades as well as anthropology and sociology Long paves the way for the formulation of an emergent feminist methodology for telling women's lives This highly original study seeks to revise and recreate the genre so as to accommodate a feminine discourse narrator reader and subject The messiness of women's lives the daily work and detail that men have programmatically excluded acquires new meaning as Long develops here an innovative theory of sociobiography

Telling Women's Lives Kathleen Weiler, Sue Middleton, 1999 This collection brings together the work of scholars exploring the history of women in education in a number of different national settings The contributors include both established scholars who have completed major studies and younger scholars exploring new directions All of these writers share an engagement in reflection on the process of history writing and consider the impact of recent theoretical debates on their own scholarship Their work reflects the influence of feminist theory and poststructuralism but also of postcolonial theory and theories of the educational state In these essays writers address such key issues as the nature of historical evidence the continuing need to uncover the hidden histories of women as teachers the ways life history narratives can illuminate women's own conceptions of themselves as women and teachers the material conditions of teaching as work for women and the way conceptions of gender have shaped women's experiences in relation to the educational state the family class sexuality and race These feminist writers also explore the ways they are implicated in the very subject of their research the educated woman who is also an educator

Telling Women's Lives Linda Wagner-Martin, 1994 Amid the current controversy over biography as partial invention she weighs the possibilities of ever achieving a true depiction of a life and outlines the responsibility of the biographer and the art of biographical writing As an accomplished biographer herself Wagner Martin weaves comments about her experiences writing about Sylvia Plath Ellen Glasgow John Dos Passos and most recently Gertrude Stein throughout her discussion Her point of view is always illuminating lively and readable
