

LITERATURE REVIEW – COMPARATIVE ANALYSIS OF PARLIAMENTARY IMPACT IN THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

This is a standalone section of the literature review for my PhD, the focus of which is on the impact which parliaments have in the legislative process.

One of the main functions of parliament is to “make” the law. That is, before laws can be changed, new laws created, or old laws repealed, this must be approved by parliament.

The focus of this PhD is on what happens during that parliamentary consideration of legislative proposals? What do parliaments do to the legislation put before them by the executive? Do parliaments change the legislation? If they do change it, in what ways? Are any changes significant, trivial, or something in between?

Literature Review – Comparative analysis of parliamentary impact in the legislative process

Answering some of these questions needs a comparative framework. In order to understand the significance of a legislature’s role in the legislative process, it helps to know how it compares to other parliaments. Is its impact on legislation of a type? If it is, what is that type and what does that tell us about the parliament?

The desire to set parliaments and their role in the legislative process in comparative context is not new. There is an existing body of literature which seeks to address exactly this issue. Between them, Blondel¹, Mezey², Norton³ and Polsby⁴ have developed a range of concepts and frameworks to describe and categorise the variation which exists in parliamentary impact in the legislative process.

Set out below is a brief description of how these typologies and differentiate types and forms of impact in the legislative process. A visual representation is offered of how these different typologies can be brought together to create a unified spectrum of legislative impact. Finally, there is a consideration of some of their weaknesses and areas for further development.

Nelson Polsby – arena and transformative legislatures

Polsby proposes a spectrum of legislative power. At one end are “transformative” parliaments, capable of taking legislation created by the government (or anyone else who is entitled to create legislation) and fundamentally changing (transforming) what it does. At the other end of the spectrum are “arena” parliaments, which scrutinise legislation created by the government but do not change what it does. When he wrote his theory, Polsby suggested that the US Congress was an example of a transformative parliament and the UK Parliament of an arena parliament.

Parliaments in South Asia Nizam Ahmed, 2020-02-05 This book explores the development decline and resurgence of parliaments in India Pakistan and Bangladesh Although the three parliaments formally have a common origin and follow almost similar rules and procedures substantial variations can be observed in their behavior By analyzing the nature of memberships processes of legislation and oversight of the executive the book assesses the impact of Indian Pakistani and Bangladeshi parliaments In addition to identifying the ways in which different institutional actors particularly the parliament and the judiciary define their roles and relationships the book investigates the role of committees and the significance and effect of female legislators While showing that the parliament in India has had a steady growth since its inception notwithstanding the allegation that it has declined in recent years the author also demonstrates the differential performance of the parliaments in Bangladesh and Pakistan In particular the parliament in Pakistan is shown to likely be able to upgrade its status from a minimal to at least a marginal legislature while the Bangladesh parliament risks becoming a minimal legislature A valuable resource to use when comparing strategies and outcomes of postcolonial developments in the operation of parliaments this book will be of interest to academics in the field of political and economic development governance and South Asian Studies
