The Montreal Massacre Peter Eglin, Stephen Hester, 2006-01-01 The Montreal Massacre A Story of Membership Categorization Analysis adopts an ethnomethodological viewpoint to analyze how the murder of women by a lone gunman at the Ecole Polytechnique in Montreal was presented to the public via media publication over a two week period in 1989 All that the public came to know and understand of the murders the murderer and the victims was constituted in the description and commentaries produced by the media What the murders became therefore was an expression of the methods used to describe and evaluate them and central to these methods was membership category analysis the human practice of perceiving people places and events as members of categories and to use these to explain actions This is evident in the various versions comprising the overall story of the Massacre it was a crime it was a tragedy it was a horror story The killer s story is also based on his own categorial analysis he said his victims were feminists The media commentators formulated the significance of the murders in categorical terms it implicated a wider problem that of violence against women and thus the reasons for the murders were shown to be categorical matters As a contribution to sociology and as a demonstration of the significance of ethnomethodology for understanding social life the book reveals the methodical and particularly categorical character of how sense is made of events such as this and how such methodical and categorical resources are central to human interaction Rethinking Normalcy Rod why tough drug policies disproportionately impact women in the American prison system Since the 1980s when the War on Drugs kicked into high gear and prison populations soared the increase in women's rate of incarceration has steadily outpaced that of men As a result women's prisons in the US have suffered perhaps the most drastically from the overcrowding and recurrent budget crises that have plagued the penal system since harsher drugs laws came into effect In Breaking Women Jill A McCorkel draws upon four years of on the ground research in a major US women's prison to uncover why tougher drug policies have so greatly affected those incarcerated there and how the very nature of punishment in women's detention centers has been deeply altered as a result Through compelling interviews with prisoners and state personnel McCorkel reveals that popular so called habilitation drug treatment programs force women to accept a view of themselves as inherently damaged aberrant addicts in order to secure an earlier release These programs were created as a way to enact stricter punishments on female drug offenders while remaining sensitive to their perceived feminine needs for treatment yet they instead work to enforce stereotypes of deviancy that ultimately humiliate and degrade the women The prisoners are left feeling lost and alienated in the end and many never truly address their addiction as the programs organizers may have hoped A fascinating and yet sobering study Breaking Women foregrounds the gendered and racialized assumptions behind tough on crime policies while offering a vivid account of how the contemporary penal system impacts individual lives
