

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE AMERICAN SHORT STORY

By
FRED LEWIS PATTEE

Professor of American Literature in the Pennsylvania State College

The first attempt at a definitive study of the new literary form America has given to the world. The short story is shown to be the deliberate invention of no single writer, but an inevitable evolution brought about by unique conditions during a century. The book, in its wider scope, is a history of American literature in its most distinctive and original aspect.
