

Vegetarianism

- Vegetarianism is a lifestyle for a Jain, taking its starting point in the idea of sympathy for living creatures, Jiva Daya.
- While the Jain eating routine does, obviously, include mischief to plants, it is viewed as a method for survival which includes the absolute minimum measure of brutality towards living creatures. (Many types of plant material, including roots and certain organic products, are likewise prohibited from the Jain eating routine because of the more prominent number of living creatures they contain attributable to the earth in which they create.)
- . Practically, it is impossible to survive without killing or injuring some of the smallest living beings. Some lives are killed even when we breathe, drink water, or eat food. Therefore, Jainism says that minimum killing of the lowest form of life should be our ideal for survival.
- Other important aspects of the Jain philosophy of food includes eating food before sundown, mainly to spare the creatures that come out in the dark and eating fresh and healthy
