influence in local politics and their distinct religious practices caused fear and hostility among nearby residents The first significant persecution the Mormons faced occurred in Missouri in the early 1830s The tensions escalated when a group of anti Mormon settlers attacked the Mormon community in Jackson County forcing them to leave Smith and his followers moved to the neighboring county of Caldwell where they were promised protection but their troubles continued In 1838 violence erupted again and the Missouri governor issued an infamous order to expel the Mormons from the state
