

More good sporting verse has been written in English than in any other language. This is a selection which its editor, Peter Verney, believes will provide each of its readers with some new delight as well as reminding them of poems that may have been too long forgotten.

Sporting verse is seldom solemn and it usually tells a story. That is why poets like Andrew Lang, Patrick Chalmers and G. J. Whyte-Melville are well represented. It can also, however, be written at a rather higher level, hence the representation of John Donne and Charles Cotton. Finally, sporting verse can sometimes be nonsense verse, as the inclusion of John Betjeman's 'Hunter Trials' and Hilaire Belloc's 'Lord Epsom' delightfully proves.

It fortunately happens that the finest wood-engraver England has produced, Thomas Bewick, was responsible for a varied series of sporting cuts. He is the ideal illustrator for a collection such as this since his tiny vignettes have a poetry of their own and since he is himself so clearly in sympathy with the sports of hunting, fishing and shooting.
