Anthropologists and the Rediscovery of America, 1886-1965 John S. Gilkeson, 2010-09-20 This book examines the intersection of cultural anthropology and American cultural nationalism from 1886 when Franz Boas left Germany for the United States until 1965 when the National Endowment for the Humanities was established Five chapters trace the development within academic anthropology of the concepts of culture social class national character value and civilization and their dissemination to non anthropologists As Americans came to think of culture anthropologically as a complex whole far broader and more inclusive than Matthew Arnold s the best which has been thought and said so too did they come to see American communities as stratified into social classes distinguished by their subcultures to attribute the making of the American character to socialization rather than birth to locate the distinctiveness of American culture in its unconscious canons of choice and to view American culture and civilization in a global perspective Social Anthropology Kevin Jack Riley, Clifford Wilcox, 2017-07-28 Robert Redfield is remembered today primarily as an anthropologist but during his lifetime Redfield s cross disciplinary activity reflected a strong interest in infusing anthropological practice with sociological theory Like a handful of other anthropologists including A R Radcliffe Brown and Bronislaw Malinowski who shared his interests during the 1920s through 1930s his works came to define a new subfield known as social anthropology Redfield was distinct in being one of the first Americans to devote himself seriously to social anthropology a field dominated initially by British scholars He spent his career at the University of Chicago and his anthropology bore the distinct mark of sociology as developed and practiced at that institution Indeed Redfield played a major role in defining what has been called the second Chicago school of sociology This volume brings together Redfield s most important contributions to social anthropology During the 1920s sociology and anthropology constituted a single department at the University of Chicago Although most students concentrated on sociology or anthropology Redfield chose to pursue both fields with equal intensity He adopted as his central interest the leading problematic of the 1920s the study of social change Chicago School sociologists approached social change by examining zones of rapid transition within the city for example areas populated by recently arrived immigrants with the goal of elucidating general principles or dynamics of social transition Redfield's work can be seen as falling into three distinct theoretical categories 1 the study of social change or modernization 2 peasant studies and 3 the comparative study of civilizations Drawing from articles book excerpts and unpublished papers and letters this work presents Redfield's central contributions in each of these areas Seen as a whole this volume traces Redfield's seminal contributions to the early development of modern anthropology

Maya and Spaniard in Yucatan, 1648-1812 Robert Patch, 1994-04-01 A study of the development of human society in Yucatan during the colonial period this book poses a challenge to a variety of accepted views including the notion that Yucatan was largely isolated from the main part of Spain's New World empire and thus from international markets and the world economy an isolation often cited as the principal reason for the extended survival of indigenous culture in the region In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries Yucatan society was composed of both Maya and Spanish commonwealths each with its own economic social and political organization This book represents several new departures both for what is known about colonial Yucatan and for colonial Latin American history in general It forces the reader to rethink much of the received knowledge about acculturation the hacienda and inter regional relations
