

Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby, and smell is controlled by the number of receptors in the nose and mouth. The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular odors. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense of touch, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of the substance in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste is not as strong as for higher concentrations.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with proteins, or its agent, glutamate or meat broth.

The taste bud

Each taste bud contains gustatory cells. These cells are located on the surface of the tongue. The resulting receptor potential sends a signal to the brain via the gustatory nerve. The gustatory nerve is composed of the gustatory cells. Gustatory cells are located on the tongue, and they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorous molecules into contact with the olfactory nerve, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of an inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors

Olfactory receptors are located in the olfactory epithelium. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue that is located in the upper part of the nasal cavity. It is composed of olfactory receptor cells, supporting cells, and basal cells. The olfactory receptor cells are connected directly to the olfactory nerve, which carries the signal to the brain.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more receptors to taste compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are located on the tongue. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse. The site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "messenger" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The postsynaptic cell then sends a signal to the brain, which can increase the number of receptors.
