

System aimed to prevent infections

By David J. Henderson, University of Birmingham

Researchers at the University of Birmingham have developed a system aimed at preventing infections in hospitals. The system is designed to detect and prevent the spread of bacteria and viruses in the environment.

The system is based on a network of sensors that monitor the air and surfaces in the hospital. The sensors are designed to detect the presence of bacteria and viruses, and to alert staff if a potential infection is detected.

The system is currently being tested in a hospital in Birmingham. The researchers hope that the system will be able to prevent the spread of infections and reduce the risk of patients becoming ill.

The system is a significant advance in the field of infection control. It is hoped that it will be able to prevent the spread of infections and reduce the risk of patients becoming ill.
