

Mastery-Based Instruction	Pros	Cons
Mastery-based instruction centers on understanding and putting into practice a process that recognizes that learning happens after trying, failing, receiving feedback, and putting the feedback into practice.	• Facilitates student learning and often leads to higher achievement than more traditional classes • Builds in good study habits • Addresses needs immediately • Increases long-term knowledge retention	• Difficult to control pacing so that all students are getting the time (or content) they need at the right time • Not student-led, but teacher-directed • Feedback requires time from educators because it is critical and should be quick and informative
