

Case teaching method

- Students are given the following materials:
 - A fictional “story” describing characters on different sides of the dilemma posed in the case study.
 - Scientific background information about the topic.
 - Copies of relevant papers and web site references.
- The class is divided into three groups—each “interest group” has a certain point of view.
 - Students read papers and are given specific questions to answer from the point of view of their assigned interest group.
- Evaluation
 - Students hand in written answers to questions posed in the case study.
 - Each group prepares a short presentation to the class using the point of view of their interest group.
 - There is time allowed for class discussion. Students are given grades for their participation.
