

THE WORLD OF THE GREAT CLASSICS VOL.3

MENDELSSOHN and BRUCH VIOLIN CONCERTOS

RUGGIERO RICCI · LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA · PIERINO GAMBA

STEREO
SPA 88

SIDE ONE
Mendelssohn: concerto in E minor for violin and orchestra, Op. 64

1. Allegro molto appassionato
2. Andante
3. Allegro molto vivace

SIDE TWO
Bruch: concerto in G minor for violin and orchestra, Op. 26

1. Verspiel - Allegro moderato
2. Adagio
3. Allegro energico

The Violin Concerto in E minor is Mendelssohn's only mature violin concerto. It was completed in 1844 after some six years of interrupted work. Although the solo part is undoubtedly virtuosic, it is not merely a cascade of notes designed to demonstrate the skill of the performer; some of the themes are among the most lyrical in the repertoire. Such is the one with which the violin opens the first movement. The orchestra soon takes over and introduces two themes of its own which are in turn taken up by the soloist before launching into the bravura display of the cadenza. A quiet interlude prepares for the ensuing Andante. The melody with which this movement opens and closes is a very beautiful "song without words". There is a contrasting middle section in more agitated mood but this soon gives way to the warmth and radiance which a repeat of the opening brings.

A fanfare-like passage leads directly into the third movement, (a favourite device with Mendelssohn for linking movements) and the music takes on a lightness and delicacy which persists to the end of the work.

Bruch's concerto is further removed from the classical concerto form than is Mendelssohn's. The nature of the solo instrument dictates the subject matter so that the demonstrative displays of virtuosity make the inclusion of a cadenza unnecessary. The usual three movements are continuous. The central Adagio contains some very beautiful melodies in rich, romantic mood and the whole movement has unusual beauty. The scintillating first subject of the Finale gives way to a more sedate melody before the excitement begins to mount and the work ends in jubilant mood.
