The Parramore Sketches Scenes And Stories Of Early West Texas:

The Parramore Sketches Dock Dilworth Parramore, 2004 In 1885 at the age of ten D D Parramore studied art with an itinerant artist in the four year old town of Abilene Texas Although he displayed considerable talent he was discouraged from sketching and painting by his father He was allowed no more instruction in what was then considered an unmanly occupation especially for the son of an enterprising frontier cattleman Heeding his father's wishes Parramore homesteaded land and bought surrounding sections in West Texas After his retirement from active ranching however he returned to his early love of drawing In the mid 1930s he began a series of pencil sketches to entertain and instruct his two young grandchildren The activity grew into a satisfying hobby which he pursued until his death in 1946 The drawings depict an unromanticized and sometimes humorous version of the life of early settlers and cowboys that Parramore remembered so well He had a wealth of favorite stories that he illustrated in words and text tales but taken together they represent a cross section of ranch life in Texas just before and after the turn of the century Originally published in 1976 the book has been out of print for a good many years We are pleased to bring back this important slice of early Texas ranch life so it can be studied and enjoyed by a new generation of readers The sketches will be on exhibit in July 2004 at the Grace Museum in Abilene
