The English Peasantry And The Enclosure Of Common Fields:

The English Peasantry and the Enclosure of Common Fields Gilbert Slater, 2017-09-30 Far more important from a broad national point of view is the enclosure of common fields the enclosure that is of land previously cultivated according to a system which did not involve the separation of one holding from another by any tangible barrier Enclosure of this sort when suddenly effected as by a Private Act of Enclosure is rightly termed the extinction of a village community In the following chapters it will be shown in detail from existing and recent survivals what was the nature of the system of cultivation in open and common fields in different parts of England up to the time of enclosure the question when and how enclosure was brought about in different counties will be discussed and light will be thrown upon the result of the transition from the medieval to the modern system of village life upon the material and moral condition of the villagers the peasants farmers or labourers who underwent the change In these chapters facts drawn directly from observations and inquiries in the villages themselves from the observations of agricultural writers who speak from direct and intimate knowledge and from the Enclosure Acts will be left in the main to tell their own story But a generalised statement will perhaps make that story clearer
