

Eurobond Market

- The emergence of the Eurobond market is partially due to the 1963 Interest Equalization Tax imposed in the U.S.
- The tax discouraged U.S. investors from investing in foreign securities, so non-U.S. borrowers looked elsewhere for funds.
- Then in 1984, U.S. corporations were allowed to issue bearer bonds directly to non-U.S. investors, and the withholding tax on bond purchases was abolished.

Has the U.S. Bond Market Lost its Edge to the Eurobond Market? Stavros Peristiani, 2008 The growth of the European financial markets together with the new stricter regulations on the U S financial system has spurred a debate about the competitiveness of the U S financial markets In this paper we compare underwriting costs in the U S bond market and the Eurobond market over the last ten years and investigate whether recent changes in the U S bond market s relative competitiveness have affected U S firms choice of bond issuing market Our results show that ten years ago it was less expensive to issue in the U S bond market than in the Eurobond market and that underwriting costs have declined continuously in the U S market over the last decade Importantly we also find that these costs decreased at an even faster rate in the Eurobond market to the point of eliminating the competitive wedge of the U S bond market These findings are robust to bond firm and underwriter specific characteristics and do not appear to be driven by sample selection as they hold when we consider a sample of issuers that is both constant over time and common to both markets Finally we find that U S firms are increasingly opting to issue their bonds in the Eurobond market instead of the U S market and that this relocation toward the Eurobond market is partly caused by the decline in the relative competitiveness of the U S bond market
