extra territorial but extra human Crespuscular Dawn expands Virilio's vision of the implosion of physical time and space onto the micro level of bioengineering and biotechnology In this cat and mouse dialogue between Sylvère Lotringer and Paul Virilio Lotringer pushes Virilio to uncover the historical foundations of his biotech theories Citing various medical experiments conducted during World War II Lotringer asks whether biotechnology isn't the heir to eugenics and the science for racial improvement that the Nazis enthusiastically embraced Will the endocolonization of the body come to replace the colonization of one's own population by the military Both biographical and thematic the book explores the development of Virilio's investigation of space architecture urbanism and time speed and simultaneity that would ultimately lay the foundation for his theories on biotechnology and his startling declaration that after the colonization of space begins the colonization of the body
