ROGER. SHATTUCK

The Innocent Eye:

The Innocent Eye Jonathan Fineberg, 1997 When I was the age of these children I could draw like Raphael It took me many years to learn how to draw like these children Pablo Picasso upon viewing an exhibition of children's drawings as quoted by Sir Herbert Read in 1945 The idea that modern art looks like something a child can do is a long standing cliché For some modernists however the connection between their work and children's art was direct and explicit This groundbreaking and heretical book centered on such modern masters as Klee Kandinsky Picasso and Mir presents for the first time material from the collections of child art that these artists actually possessed as they undertook some of the greatest masterworks of their careers As the first art historian to pursue this connection in detail Jonathan Fineberg here explores the importance of children's art to the work of key modernists from Matisse to Jackson Pollock Fineberg's inquiry unfolds in this handsome book which juxtaposes modern masterpieces with the drawings by children that directly influenced them Fineberg discusses the effect of primitivism and Freudian thought on some of these artists and demonstrates how they valued children's art for many reasons including its naive spontaneity and celebration of the moment imaginative use of visual language and its universality and candor For each of the masters who collected child art the reasons for doing so are as varied as his or her unique style Fineberg has uncovered most of these major collections of child art assembled by celebrated modernists Many examples from these collections are reproduced in this book for the first time together with explanations as to why expressionists cubists futurists and others displayed the art of children alongside their own work in exhibitions of the early twentieth century In chapters devoted to Larionov Kandinsky and Matisse Klee Picasso Mir Dubuffet the Cobra artists and artists after World War II Fineberg examines how each artist exploited aspects of child art to formulate his or her own artistic breakthroughs With over 170 color plates and 140 black and white illustrations this visually compelling book will stimulate new research among art historians and will inspire museum visitors to see some of their favorite modern masterpieces in a new way The INNOCENT EYE. "The Innocent Eye". Bear Lane Gallery (Oxford), 1967 The Innocent Eye Nico Orlandi, 2014 Why does the world look to us as it does Generally speaking this question has received two types of answers in the cognitive sciences in the past fifty or so years According to the first the world looks to us the way it does because we construct it to look as it does According to the second the world looks as it does primarily because of how the world is In The Innocent Eye Nico Orlandi defends a position that aligns with this second world centered tradition but that also respects some of the insights of constructivism Orlandi develops an embedded understanding of visual processing according to which while visual percepts are representational states the states and structures that precede the production of percepts are not representations If we study the environmental contingencies in which vision occurs and we properly distinguish functional states and features of the visual apparatus from representational states and features we obtain an empirically more plausible world centered account

Orlandi shows that this account accords well with models of vision in perceptual psychology such as Natural Scene Statistics and Bayesian approaches to perception and outlines some of the ways in which it differs from recent enactive approaches to vision. The main difference is that although the embedded account recognizes the importance of movement for perception it does not appeal to action to uncover the richness of visual stimulation. The upshot is that constructive models of vision ascribe mental representations too liberally, ultimately misunderstanding the notion. Orlandi offers a proposal for what mental representations are that following insights from Brentano, James, and a number of contemporary cognitive scientists, appeals to the notions of decoupleability and absence to distinguish representations from mere tracking states.
