EXCERPT FROM THE BOOK: Madame, I entreat you to completely separate the author from the man and to believe in the sincerity of the sentiments which I have vaguely expressed in the correspondence you have obliged me to hold with you. In spite of the perpetual caution which some friends give me against certain letters like those which I have had the honour to receive from you, I have been keenly touched by a tone that levity cannot counterfeit. If you will deign to excuse the folly of a young heart and a wholly virgin imagination, I will own that you have been to me the object of the sweetest dreams. In spite of my hard work, I have found myself more than once galloping through space to hover above the unknown country where you also unknown live alone of your race. I have taken pleasure in comprehending you among the remains almost always unfortunate of a dispersed people, a people scattered thinly over the earth, exiled perhaps from heaven but of whom each being has language and sentiments to him peculiar and unlike those of other men: delicacy, choiceness of soul, chasteness of feeling. Pg 2: tenderness of heart purer, sweeter, gentler than in the best of other created beings. There is something saintly in even their enthusiasms and calm in their ardour. These poor exiles have all in their voices, their words

their ideas something I know not what which distinguishes them from others which serves to bind them to one another in spite of distance lands and language a word a phrase the very sentiment exhaled in a look are like a rallying call which they obey and compatriots of a hidden land whose charms are reproduced in their memories they recognize and love one another in the name of that country toward which they stretch their arms Poesy music and religion are their three divinities their favourite loves and all these passions awake in their hearts sensations that are equally powerful I have clothed you with all these ideas I have held out to you my hand fraternally from afar without conceit without affectation but with a confidence that is almost domestic with sincerity and could you have seen my glance you would have recognized within it both the gratitude of a lover and the religions of the heart the pure tenderness that binds the son to a mother the brother to a sister the respect of a young man for woman and the delightful hopes of a long and fervent friendship T was an episode wholly romantic but who will dare to blame the romantic It is only frigid souls who cannot conceive all there is of vast in the emotions to which the unknown gives full scope The less we are restrained by reality the higher is the flight of the soul I have therefore let myself gently float upon my reveries and they are ravishing So if a star darts from your candle if your ear should catch a distant murmur if you see figures in the fire if something sparkles or speaks beside you near you believe that my spirit is wandering among your panels Amid the battle I am fighting amid my heavy toil my Pg 3 endless studies in this agitated Paris where politics and literature absorb some sixteen or eighteen hours of the twenty four to me an unfortunate man widely different from the author that people imagine come charming hours which I owe to you So in order to thank you I dedicated to you the fourth volume of the Sc nes de la Vie priv e putting your seal at the head of the last Scene which I was writing at the moment when I received your first letter But a person who is a mother for me and whose caprices and even jealousy I am bound to respect exacted that this silent testimony of secret sentiments should be suppressed The Letters
