

Resuspension of Lead (Pb) in Oakland, CA Investigating a Possible Source of Urban Lead Contamination

Martina Goh-Che, Daniel Lopez, John Lutz

1068

Introduction

Lead (Pb) is a toxic metal that can cause serious health problems, especially in children. It is found in many everyday items, including paint, pipes, and gasoline. In Oakland, CA, there is a high concentration of lead in the soil, which is a result of historical lead contamination. This project aims to investigate the resuspension of lead in the air and its potential contribution to urban lead contamination.

Methods

We used a combination of field measurements and laboratory experiments to study the resuspension of lead. Field measurements were taken at various locations in Oakland, including a busy street and a residential area. Laboratory experiments were conducted to determine the resuspension rate of lead from different surfaces under various conditions.

Results

Our results show that the resuspension of lead is a significant source of urban lead contamination. The highest resuspension rates were observed on busy streets and in areas with high traffic volume. The resuspension rate of lead from residential surfaces was also found to be significant, particularly in areas with older paint.

Conclusion

The resuspension of lead is a major source of urban lead contamination in Oakland, CA. Our findings suggest that reducing lead in the environment, particularly in areas with high traffic volume, is essential for improving public health. Further research is needed to develop effective strategies for lead abatement and to reduce the resuspension of lead in the air.
