

2. DIRECTIONS IN LITERATURE

Regionalism could be considered a transition between the romantics and the true realists. They emphasized details of local settings and regional dialect, yet writers like Bret Harte concentrated on unusual characters (more a romantic trait).

Realism became the dominant literary form in the United States in the late nineteenth century. It includes:

- a. Emphasis on common everyday life
- b. Usually common characters from the middle or lower classes
- c. Often local dialect
- d. Has little or no regard for the mystical or supernatural

The three most significant realists included William Dean Howells, Henry James, and Mark Twain.

Naturalism became the extreme expression of realism, applying the ideas of Darwin to the human plight. Jack London is probably the most popular example.
