
The Peaceful Conspiracy: Bond Markets and International Relations During the Pax Britannica

Marc Flandreau and Juan H. Flores

Abstract This article provides foundations to Polanyi's famed argument that monopoly power in the global capital market served as an instrument of peace during the Pax Britannica (1815–1914). Our perspective is novel—we focus on the role of intermediaries and certification. We show that when information and enforcement are imperfect, there is scope for the endogenous emergence of “prestigious” intermediaries who enjoy a monopoly position and as a result, control government actions. They can implement conditional lending: they subject the distribution of credit to the adoption of peaceful policies. Prestigious intermediaries act that way because of their concern with maintaining an unblemished track record when wars increased risks of default. Our analysis, which brings together insights from different disciplines, provides a significant extension to, and departure from, recent research on how countries accumulate reputational capital.

In the pantheon of international political economy (IPE), Karl Polanyi's Great Transformation occupies a central position. His famed conjecture that financiers were responsible for the “Hundred Years Peace” between the Congress of Vienna (1815) and the Austrian Archduke Franz-Ferdinand's assassination in Sarajevo (1914) provides an early recognition of the interrelations between economics and politics. Polanyi claimed that peace was the result of conscious actions by a subgroup of financiers, which he called “Haute Finance” and within which the House of Rothschild reigned supreme, “embodying the principle of abstract internationalism” (whatever is meant by that beautiful phrase). As he argued:

The authors are grateful to Melusie Asprey from the Rothschild Archive, London, for her support and access to the Rothschild Frères Archive in the Centre d'Archives du Monde du Travail, Roubaix, France. We thank Jim Alt, Chris Assell, Gopalan Balachandran, Thomas Biersteker, Jerry Cohen, Jeff Frieden, Deirdre McCloskey, Ken Shepsle, and Stefano Ugolini for advice and suggestions. This article also received extensive criticism from the editors of International Organization and three anonymous referees whose comments proved extremely helpful. Errors and misinterpretations are ours. Last, we warmly thank Jacqueline Lanson for kind help and many useful suggestions for stylistic improvements. We also gratefully acknowledge generous funding from Yves Mirambaud. The views expressed do not implicate him, however, nor the Banque Mirambaud et Cie.
