Excerpt from The Lawgiver and Other Poems To the natural eye as we contemplate the vast field of Literature we say Of books there is no end yet the world is not full Enthusiasm with its rising progress will ever command its own on the calendar of reason My own little book filled with sheaves which I have gathered from my own garner owing to the edicts of an overruling Providence I offer to the public I can see no reason for an apology Hope has laid her cornerstone whilst Faith like a day star has guided me onward Results have their fastening in the dim future and I can only do that which I believe to be right even though I tremble before the mighty How am I to be judged how am I to be spoken of are matters to which I am truly sensitive yet I cannot for one moment feel that there are those among you who would cast upon me a dark frown or criticise with an eye too severe for endurance though yours is the right to criticise and mine to bear it About the Publisher
