Central Nervous System Neuron: The Basic Functional Unit

More than 100 billion neurons make up the central nervous system. Incoming signals enter this neuron via synapses, which are typically found on the dendrites of the neuron but also on the cell body. There may be as little as a few hundred or as many as 200,000 synaptic connections from input fibers for different types of neurons. The signal generally flows only in the forward direction, from the axon of a preceding neuron to dendrites on the cell membranes of following neurons, which is a unique property of most synapses. This forces the signal to travel in the necessary directions for specific neural processes to be performed.
