

I. INTRODUCTION

- a. This part must include an introduction to the topic and investigation as well as the personal importance of writing about said subject. Include answers to the reader's most frequent questions such as what you intend to solve with your review, the deep meaning of your writing, and other relevant information.
- b. In this section, students should also include the methodology used and the results they want to achieve.

BODY

II. First Topic

- a. The general subject in this part should be reviewed in general terms as well as the main aspects and details about it.
- b. The next step is to select a characteristic about the subject to further analyze and narrow the topic down.
 - i. Present questions, methods, hypotheses, and participants to review the first study presented. Include the results achieved at the end of the research.
 - ii. When introducing the second study, students must address the importance and difference between this one and the one mentioned above.
 - iii. For study three and others presented if necessary, the procedure just explained should be followed. The most important factor is to explain why the different studies differ from each other, whether it's because of the outcomes, research approach, etc.
- c. Repeat the analysis for other subtopics relevant to the review.
 - i. For the study presented, name the methodology, data collection, participants, results, and an overall explanation of the research.
 - ii. Continue repeating this procedure for every study conducted and make sure to properly present the information and make a distinction between the data presented.
 - iii. Students should invest time going deep into their research and dwell on their study's questions, results, hypothesis, and relevant sources used.
 - iv. Analyze more subtopics from this first topic and follow the structure and procedure described.

III. Second Topic

- a. Mention all the necessary topics and subtopics while properly analyzing and presenting new information to give readers the full picture and different perspectives of your review.

IV. CONCLUSION

- a. This last part must contain the author's final thoughts, common findings, pros and cons of the different studies and approaches as well as anything relevant.
- b. Students should aim to answer every question they've mentioned, and if not, this part can be used to finish the task.
- c. Lastly, the conclusion can include similar topic recommendations readers can use to deepen their knowledge about this topic as well as the author's plans after writing this piece (what he or she intends to do with the information learned, how he or she will use this data in the future, etc).
