North Carolina Natives The First People of North Carolina

Archaeologists believe that Paleo Indians were the first people to live in North Carolina. Paleo comes from a Greek word meaning "very old." These Native Americans came here around ten to twelve thousand years ago. Paleo Indians were hunters and gatherers who lived in small groups of only ten or so people. They were often called "nomads" because they moved from place to place in search of food. They used tools made of stone, bone, and wood. They were also skilled at making clothing from animal skins.

As time passed, Paleo Indians began to settle in one place. They started to grow crops and raise animals. They also began to make pottery and other things. These people are called "Archaic Indians."

North Carolina Natives: The First People

They often settled near glacial lakes. These were lakes left behind by large bodies of ice, melted at the end of the Ice Age. Villages, food, tools, and other supplies were readily available.

Paleo Indians were hunters, fishermen, and gatherers. They lived in small groups and moved from place to place. They were often called "nomads" because they moved from place to place in search of food. They used tools made of stone, bone, and wood. They were also skilled at making clothing from animal skins.

During the winter months, the Paleo Indians depended on three things. These things were corn, beans, and squash. These three things were called the "Three Sisters." These crops were grown together. The corn provided a ladder for the beans to climb. The beans provided nitrogen for the corn. The squash provided a cover for the corn and beans. By planting these crops together, the Paleo Indians were able to grow more food.
