Abstract

A pastor is widely viewed as a shepherd and a Christian leader. Pastors have complex roles stemming from a complex calling; pastoral practice is multidimensional and not easily defined. The contemporary use of the term "pastor" denotes different kinds of religious roles in church leadership. In mainline denominations a pastor is generally viewed as an ordained minister designated for the ministry of the word and administering sacraments. The pastor has many pastoral roles including church leadership, pastoral care, the preaching of the word. It is argued in this article that the key role of the pastor is that of a teacher who empowers the lay leadership and church members in general through his/her various pastoral roles. In Southern African languages such as Shona use the term mufundisi while in Ndebele and Zulu use the umfundisi referring to a pastor. This is most appropriate because mufundisi/umfundisi means an ordained minister who is regarded as a teacher, equipper of people and leader of all sections of the church. The article begins by discussing the general processes and procedures of pastoral calling in the mainline denominations. It draws its central point of the pastor being a teacher from the very accurate way in which the pastor is viewed and defined as a mufundisi in the above-mentioned African languages, as well as from the role of Jesus as a teacher. The article then discusses the nature of the pastor as a teacher and the expectations of this role in pastoral ministry from a southern African context.

Keywords: Pastor, Mufundisi, teacher, laity, mainline, empowering.

Introduction

While the title "pastor" is not often used by mainline denominations like the Anglican Church, the Lutheran Church, and the Methodist Church, it is frequently used by Pentecostal denominations such as the Family of God Apostolic Faith Mission and Glad Tidings and Victory Fellowship (Moyo, 2015). The title "pastor" is used to explicitly refer to the functional ministry of Christian leadership and caring for God's people, and pastors in mainline denominations are typically referred to as reverends, ministers, and occasionally as priests. In many instances the term is used with reference to the leader of a congregation, or parish who is then regarded as "the pastor in charge". The term "pastor" actually means a Christian leader who is ordained and appointed by the church to shepherd God's people. A pastor serves as an ambassador for the universal body of Christ in all of his or her roles. These include gathering the flock of God around the word and the sacraments in order to heal, guide, feed and sustain the people of God in their different circumstances and in a range of contexts of life. The focus of this article is to explore the role of the pastor as an educator in the church as expressed by the title mufundisi, a teacher following the model of Christ the master teacher. The article begins by defining a pastor and pastoral calling to ministry. It will then focus on the model of a teacher
