Religious Freedom and the Neutrality of the State W. A. R. Shadid, P. Sj. van Koningsveld, 2002 The permanent presence of Islam and Muslims is a comparatively recent phenomenon in most countries of the European Union Over the last few decades many initiatives have been launched by Muslim communities in the European Union to create infrastructural provisions for their religious life within the existing legal and social frameworks In fact all countries of the European Union share the principles of religious freedom and non discrimination in their respective Constitutions However the precise way in which these principles are interpreted and applied to Islam depends largely on the historical traditions concerning the relation between State and Religion which differ from one country to another These differences are reflected in recent developments in the communication between the States and their Muslim communities both at national regional and municipal levels They are also reflected in recent developments in legislation and jurisprudence concerning the most essential Islamic core values such as dietary laws the precepts on modest dress Islamic burial practices and the possibilities to found Islamic cemeteries as well as the observance of Friday prayers and annual holidays Looking at the legal position of Islam in the countries of the European Union the authors of this volume discuss the challenges posed by the presence of Islam to the Western European system of relationships between law and religion They argue that these challenges necessitate reforms within the relevant European legislation but differ as to their precise nature They also discuss the difficulties of this task as these adjustments will alter a longstanding balance of rights and privileges recognised by different religious denominations Legal reforms however are not sufficient The creation of a truly multicultural Europe also necessitates fighting against the negative image of Islam and Muslims anti Muslimism or Islamophobia prevailing in most of its member states

After the Internet Tiziana Terranova, 2022-12-13 On the internet's transformation from communication tool to computational infrastructure The internet is no more If it still exists it does so only as a residual technology still effective in the present but less intelligible as such After nearly two decades and a couple of financial crises it has become the almost imperceptible background of today's Corporate Platform Complex CPC a pervasive planetary technological infrastructure that meshes communication with computation In the essays collected in this book written mostly between the mid 2000s and the late 2010s Tiziana Terranova bears witness to this monstrous transformation Mobilizing theories of cognitive capitalism neo monadology and sympathetic cooperation considering ideas such as the attention economy and its psychopathologies and evoking the relation between algorithmic automation and the Common she provides real time takes on the mutations that have changed the technological cultural and economic ethos of the Internet Mostly conceived elaborated and discussed in collective activist spaces After the Internet is neither apocalyptic lamentation nor melancholic rise and fall story of betrayed great expectations On the contrary it looks

within the folds of the recent past to unfold the potential futurities that the post digital computational present still entails

Founders, Classics, Canons Peter Baehr, 2017-07-05 Founders classics and canons have been vitally important in helping to frame sociology's identity. Within the academy today a number of positions feminist postmodernist postcolonial question the status of tradition. In Founders Classics Canons Peter Baehr defends the continuing importance of sociology's classics and traditions in a university education. Baehr offers arguments against interpreting, defending and attacking sociology's great texts and authors in terms of founders and canons. He demonstrates why in logical and historical terms discourses and traditions cannot actually be founded and why the term founder has little explanatory content. Equally he takes issue with the notion of canon and argues that the analogy between the theological canon and sociological classic texts though seductive is mistaken. Although he questions the uses to which the concepts of founder, classic and canon have been put, Baehr is not dismissive. On the contrary he seeks to understand the value and meaning these concepts have for the people who employ them in the cultural battle to affirm or attack the liberal university tradition.

Ecologies of Internet Video John Hondros, 2018-05-24 This book explores the complex dynamic and contested webs of relationships in which three different groups of video makers found themselves when distributing their work on the Internet. It draws upon both the Deleuzian notion of assemblage and Actor Network Theory which together provide a rich conceptual framework for characterizing and analysing these webs. The groups examined are a UK video activist project, a community of film and television fans originating in the US and an association of US community television producers. Rather than taking YouTube as its point of departure, this book centres on the groups themselves contextualizing their contemporary distribution practices within their pre-Internet histories. It then follows the groups as they drew upon various Internet technologies beyond YouTube to create their often complex video distribution assemblages, a process that entangled them in these webs of relationships. Through the analysis of detailed ethnographic fieldwork conducted across a period of several years, this book demonstrates that while the groups found some success in achieving their various goals as video makers, their situations were often problematic and their agency limited with their practices contested by both human and technological actors within their distribution assemblages.

Internet Regulation and the International Trade Regime Sun Nanxiang, 2022-06-30 In the age of information, an open Internet is a key component for modern economic development. This book analyses the World Trade Organization Agreement for virtual society and explores key questions regarding internet regulation and trade barriers. Information and communication technology has introduced a transformational element to international trade in the shape of e-commerce. Although internet technology is conceptually neutral, it can be used as a medium that poses severe threats to individual rights, public morals, public order and national security. World Trade Organization law and jurisprudence, which are the basis of global economic and trade rules, can be applied in cyberspace, but internet regulatory measures can also pose a threat to free trade. This book thus explores the following questions: whether internet regulation constitutes a trade barrier if so what form does that take and whether WTO members can invoke exception clauses to justify their internet regulatory measures The research provides deep interpretations on treaty law and case law and draws on additional interdisciplinary approaches to answer these questions This book will be of great interest to Scholars and Students of law with a focus on international trade and internet regulation as well as anyone interested in Chinese cyber law
