On the 3rd of December 1998, Venezuelans went to the polls for the first time to directly elect their local and regional political leaders. A process of government decentralisation was initiated with direct elections of municipal mayors and regional state governors. Since 1958, the political system had been dominated by two political parties, the social democratic AD (Acción Democrática) and Christian Democratic Copei, both strongly centralised parties. The system of strongly dominant political parties is often referred to as puntofijo, with permeation of organised social and political activities. Notwithstanding, the AD-Copei partyarchy expressed a relatively rapid process of undermining from 1989, losing control over important municipalities, governments and municipal councils. The municipal, regional and national elections of 1998 and 2000 changed the political panorama even more. Several entirely new political parties have emerged. The MVR (Movimiento 5 de República) party of current President Hugo Chávez presents the most dramatic and rapid rise in this century. For instance, other parties associated with decentralisation have achieved increased political influence. Theoretically, a combination of active rational choice and more process-structural approaches helps to theoretically understand the political transformations related to decentralisation and its implications for the party system. The study demonstrates that the party system and political decentralisation are mutually connected and dependent of each other. This study describes and analyses the “encuentro” between the Venezuelan party system and the decentralisation scheme.

RICHARD LALANDE, born in Uppsala, Sweden, in 1964, is a political scientist and research associate of the Inter-American Center (Bernal Institute) at the University of Helsinki, and the Institute of Latin American Studies at Stockholm University. He is also occasionally guest researcher at several academic institutions in Latin America and has written a number of articles on the political development of Venezuela in international scientific journals.
