Functional Foods I. Goldberg, 2012-12-06 Accuse not Nature She has done her part Do Thou but Thine Milton Paradise Lost 1667 The concept that nature imparted to foods a health giving and curative function is not new Herbal teas and remedies have been used for centuries and continue in use in many parts of the world today In modern society we have turned to drugs to treat mitigate or prevent diseases However since the discovery of nutrients and our increasing analytical capabilities at the molecular level we are beginning to become more knowledgeable of the biochemical structure function relationship of the myriad of chemicals that occur naturally in foods and their effect on the human body The holistic approach to medicine and diet that began in the 1970s has now seen a renewal as we realize that certain foods because of the presence of specific biochemicals can have a positive impact on an individual's health physical well being and mental state In fact because of the negative image of drugs and the grey area of supplements the use of foods that are functional is becoming a growth area for the food industry In Japan this concept has led to one of the largest growing markets where they have defined functional foods as regular foods derived only from naturally occurring ingredients The Japanese further require that the functional foods be consumed as part of the diet and not in supplement form

Protein Metabolism During Infancy Niels C. R. Räihä, 1994 Other chapters focus on the nutritional importance of nonprotein nitrogen the role of essential and nonessential amino acids in neonatal nutrition the significance of nucleic acids nucleotides and related compounds in infants and the role of tumor necrosis factor in protein metabolism
