

MORE THAN 20,000 PAMPHLETS FROM SOME OF THE MOST SIGNIFICANT COLLECTIONS HELD IN UK RESEARCH LIBRARIES ARE BEING MADE AVAILABLE THROUGH JSTOR.

Collaborating with BLUK (Research Libraries UK) and JMC (Joint Information Systems Committee), JSTOR is making these pamphlets searchable alongside current collections to enhance discovery and use across disciplines. Researchers, students, and teachers will have an increasingly rich and coherent corpus of primary sources with which to study the sociopolitical and economic landscape of 19th century Britain. Digitisation was completed on site by BLPODS at the University of Southampton Library.

ON COLLECTIONS

The 19th Century British Pamphlets comprise seven individual collections held in institutions within the United Kingdom, many of which are whole collections that belonged to individual politicians or political families. The pamphlets focus on the political, economic, and social issues that fueled the great Parliamentary debates and controversies of the 19th century. Although they have a political emphasis, these collections represent the wide interests of their collectors.

Convent Tracts – Newcastle University

Personal collection of Joseph Convent (1879-1900). A social reformer and Member of Parliament for Newcastle, this collection reflects his interests in social, educational, and economic issues.

Earl Grey Pamphlets Collection – Durham University

Still owned by the family, this collection was largely accumulated by the 3rd, 4th, and 5th Earls Grey. The Greys were particularly interested in parliamentary reform, colonial affairs, and Catholic emancipation.

Foreign and Commonwealth Office Collection – University of Manchester

Sent back to London by British ambassadors to help with policy formation, these rare publications from overseas have an emphasis on material related to South America and the Near East and the various European political "episodes" of the 19th century. This collection also includes unique early material from Australasia.
