This title was first published in 2001. A discussion of managerial, occupational and organizational stress research. The volume is in seven parts. The first part explores the theoretical or conceptual frameworks in occupational and organizational stress that have developed out of empirical work and work with others in different countries. The second part provides the reader with reviews of literature on different topics in the field of workplace stress. Part Three highlights a range of studies undertaken by UMIST and their collaborating colleagues in different institutions. The research that highlights issues and problems of current relevance is found in the fourth part, while the methodological studies involving instrument development, refining of existing measures and more is found in Part Five. The studies linking stress and health follow on from this, and the new area of investigation evaluating stress management interventions concludes this survey of research in this field. The

New Family ? Elizabeth Bortolaia Silva, Carol Smart, 1999-02-08. Concern and debate over changes to family life have increased in the last decade as a result of evolving employment patterns, shifting gender relations and more openness about sexual orientation. Most politicians and researchers have viewed these changes as harmful, suggesting that the family as an institution should not alter. The New Family challenges these dominant views. Leading academics in the field consider current diverse practices in families and reveal the lack of balance between policies based on how families should be and how they actually are, illustrating the need for a broader definition of family. This book shows the need to take fluidity and change in family arrangements seriously rather than see them as a threat to the family ideal.
