Epidemics and Genocide in Eastern Europe, 1890-1945 Paul Weindling,2000-02-03 During the First World War delousing became routine for soldiers and civilians following the recent discovery that the louse carried typhus germs But how did typhus come to be viewed as a Jewish disease and what was the connection between the anti typhus measures during the First World War and the Nazi gas chambers in the Second World War In this powerful book Professor Weindling draws upon wide ranging archival research throughout East and Central Europe to the United States to provide valuable new insight into the history of German medicine from its response to the perceived threat of typhus epidemics from its Eastern borders He examines how German experts in tropical medicine took an increasingly racialised approach to bacteriology regarding supposedly racially inferior peoples as carriers of the disease So they came to view typhus as a Jewish disease By the Second World War as migrants and deportees had become conditioned to expect the ordeal of delousing at border crossings ports railway junctions and on entry to camps so sanitary policing became entwined with racialisation as the Germans sought to eradicate typhus by eradicating the perceived carriers Typhus had come to assume a new and terrifying genocidal significance as the medical authorities sealed the German frontiers against diseased undesirables from the east and gassing became a favoured means of disease eradication International Jewish

A Critical History of Health Films in Central and Eastern Europe and Beyond Victoria Shmidt,Karl Kaser,2023-12-21 The burgeoning scholarship on Western health films stands in stark contrast to the vacuum in the historical conceptualization of Eastern European films This book develops a nonlinear historical model that revises their unique role in the inception of national cinematography and establishing supranational health security Readers witness the revelation of an unknown history concerning how the health films produced in Eastern European countries not only adopted Western patterns of propaganda but actively participated in its formation especially with regard to those considered others Women and the populations of the periphery The authors elaborate on the long echo of the discursive practices introduced by health films within public health propaganda as well as the attempts to negate and deconstruct such practices by rebellious filmmakers A wide range of methods including the analysis of the sociological biographies of filmmakers the historical reconstruction of public campaigns against diseases and an investigation into the production of health films contextualizes these films along a multifaceted continuum stretching between the adaptation of global patterns and the cultivation of national authenticities The book is aimed at those who study the history of film the history of public health Central and Eastern European countries and global history The Open Access version of this book available at <http://www.taylorfrancis.com> has been made available under a Creative Commons Attribution CC BY 4.0 International license
