A Singing Ambivalence Victor R. Greene, 2004 A Singing Ambivalence undertakes a comprehensive examination of the ways in which nine immigrant groups Irish Germans Scandinavians Eastern European Jews Italians Poles Hungarians Chinese and Mexicans responded to their new lives in the United States through music Each group's songs reveal an abiding concern over leaving their loved ones and homeland and an anxiety about adjusting to the new society But accompanying these feelings was an excitement about the possibilities of becoming wealthy and about looking forward to a democratic and free society known and unknown origins that comment on the problems immigrants faced and reveals the wide range of responses they made to the radical changes in their new lives in America His selection of lyrics provides useful capsules of expression that clarify the ways in which immigrants defined themselves and staked out their claims for acceptance in American society But whatever their common and specific themes they reveal an ambivalence over their coming to America and a pessimism about achieving their goals the United States while at the same time conveying from an aesthetic viewpoint how immigrants expressed their hopes and difficulties through a unique medium song This is an important volume that will be welcomed by scholars of music and U S immigration history
