

Solid Wastes and Residues

Conversion by Advanced
Thermal Processes

Waste-to-Energy (WtE) plants are designed to convert solid waste into energy, typically in the form of electricity or heat. These plants use various technologies, including incineration, gasification, and pyrolysis, to break down waste materials and generate energy. WtE plants are often used as a means of waste management, particularly for municipal solid waste (MSW), and can provide a significant source of renewable energy.

WtE plants are designed to handle a wide range of waste materials, including household waste, industrial waste, and hazardous waste. The process typically involves the following steps: 1. Waste collection and transport to the plant. 2. Waste sorting and preprocessing. 3. Waste incineration or gasification. 4. Energy recovery from the waste. 5. Waste residue management. WtE plants can provide a significant source of renewable energy, and can also help to reduce the amount of waste sent to landfills.
