

Stigma and the Burden of Infection

Dr. David A. Asch, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Stigma is a social process that occurs when a person is perceived to be different from others. Stigma is often associated with negative attitudes and behaviors towards the stigmatized person.

Stigma can be a major barrier to the treatment and care of people with infectious diseases.

Stigma can lead to social isolation and discrimination, which can further exacerbate the burden of infection. Stigma can also lead to a lack of access to healthcare and other resources.
