

SPEECH-LANGUAGE PATHOLOGIST

A speech-language pathologist (SLP) helps children with communication and swallowing difficulties. SLPs can work on the following skills:

Speech Sounds

SLPs work with kids with articulation or phonological disorders who have difficulty saying speech sounds.

Language

Language skills are important for oral and written communication. SLPs can help children improve their expressive language (the ability to express themselves) and receptive language (the ability to understand spoken language and directions).

Stuttering

SLPs teach strategies to stutterers to help them manage their stuttering and feel less anxious when speaking.

Social Communication

Social communication skills are important for making and maintaining friendships. SLPs help improve a child's social skills by targeting turn taking, joint attention, and perspective taking. Speech-language pathologists can also help children play appropriately with others.

Voice

SLPs help improve a child's voice quality, pitch, or loudness. These children might sound too high-pitched, hoarse or loud.

Feeding

Feeding or swallowing difficulties are also called dysphagia. SLPs help children with dysphagia improve their ability to swallow or chew food. Speech pathologists also work with babies and infants who have difficulty sucking milk from a bottle or from their mother.
