Preventing Suicide in Patients with Mental Disorders Maurizio Pompili, Andrea Fiorillo, 2020-12-07 Suicide is a complex phenomenon that is now considered understood as a neurodevelopmental condition encompassing childhood experiences as well as proximal conditions such as mental disorders and adverse life events Individuals in crisis may face overwhelming psychological pain which in some cases may overcome the threshold of each unique individual for whom suicide is considered the best option to deal with such pain However many socio demographic personal or temperamental variables have been investigated for their causal association with suicide risk but to date no single factor has clearly demonstrated an association with suicide The mental disorders most frequently associated with suicide risk include bipolar disorders and major unipolar depression substance use disorders and schizophrenia However anxiety personality eating and trauma related disorders as well as organic mental disorders also contribute to suicidal risk Moreover in modern society the presence of social uncertainty the changes in family models the development of social media and the loss of face to face interaction can have an impact on suicide risk particularly in the younger generation

Preventive Strategies on Suicide

Diekstra, Gulbinat, Kienhorst, Leo, 2023-07-31 Recent estimates by The World Health Organisation and The World Bank indicate that throughout the world each and every year more than 800 000 persons die as a consequence of suicide This means that the death toll of suicide equals and in many countries even exceeds that of road traffic accidents In addition to the number of suicidal deaths at least ten times as many persons make non fatal attempts to take their lives or harm themselves often seriously enough to require medical attention and not infrequently resulting in irreversible disability But still these figures inadequately describe the magnitude of human loss and suffering caused by suicide. If one assumes that for every suicidal death there are at least five persons whose lives are profoundly and often for many years affected by the event emotionally, socially and economically by the event, then each year millions of survivor victims are added to the tens of millions already out there. Hence suicide is an ever recurring catastrophe of the first degree. It is not a phenomenon that first and foremost forms a dubious privilege of the so called highly developed countries. Suicide also occurs in the developing countries and there is more than suggestive evidence that in several of these countries the suicide rate equals or even surpasses the highest national rates shown by official statistics. It follows that suicide is an extremely important public health problem. It is however a problem that is painfully neglected. Throughout the world resources devoted to the prevention of suicide are only a tiny fraction of those devoted to the prevention of comparable problems such as road traffic accidents or to problems of lesser magnitude at least in the industrialized countries such as HIV infection and Aids. This volume produced under the supervision and auspices of the World Health Organization brings together for the first time information on epidemiological, clinical and preventive intervention aspects regarding suicide that have global significance and applicability. After a detailed description of the epidemiology of suicide and suicidal behaviour on an international scale, a large part of the book is devoted to the how to's of developing and organizing suicide prevention programs and services in different national and cultural settings both at clinical and community level. In addition, a wealth of practical information for health care workers and volunteers is provided on how to evaluate and deal with acute suicide risk. Examples of successful preventive intervention programs and projects from the developed as well as the developing world are provided. Legal and ethical problems involved in suicide prevention are also discussed. Finally, both cultural and biological aspects of suicidal behaviour as well as their clinical practice relevance are examined.
