Stratigraphic Analysis Of A Deep Ice Core From Greenland:

Stratigraphic Analysis of a Deep Ice Core from Greenland ,1970 Stratigraphic Analysis of a Deep Ice Core from Greenland C. C Langway (Jr),COLD REGIONS RESEARCH AND ENGINEERING LAB HANOVER N H.,1967 A deep rotary core drilling project in 1957 at Site 2 on the Greenland ice sheet 76 deg 59 min N 56 deg 04 min W provided ice core to a depth of 411 m The vertical variation in bulk density macroscopic structure oxygen isotope ratios ionic constituents and extraterrestrial dust black spherules were analyzed using both field and laboratory techniques These data permit the direct estimate of annual accumulation layers in the core Continuous stratigraphic measurements and observations were made over the upper 110 m of the profile and detailed physical and chemical analyses were made on continuous 1.3 to 3.9 m core increments at 100 200 300 and 411 m depths The average total ionic concentration in the ice sheet ranges between 0.65 and 1.35 mg liter The annual global mass deposit of black spherules as calculated from these studies varies from 2.10×10^4 metric tons in 700 year old ice to 6.57×10^4 metric tons in 12 year old firn The oxygen isotope ratio variation provides the best means of estimating accumulation at depth Results of the investigations indicate rates of net snow accumulation of 42.3 34.2 37.4 41.1 and 41.6 g sq cm yr at the surface A.D. 1773 1513 1233 and 934 respectively Accumulation data and other physical and chemical evidence allow climatological inferences to be made over the 10 century profile The ice core record shows that snow accumulation and temperature in A.D. 934 were similar to today followed by a gradual decrease in accumulation to a minimum around the late 18th century and an increase in both accumulation and temperature from A.D. 1773 to 1957 and following Author Stratigraphic Analysis of a Deep Ice Core from Greenland Chester C. Composition and Glacier Dynamics Roland A. Souchez, Reginald D. Lorrain, 2012-12-06 Ice composition has until now been mostly used for reconstructing the environment of the past. A great research effort is made today to model the climate system in which the ice cover at the earth surface plays a prominent role. To obtain a correct model of the ice sheets due attention must be paid to the physical processes operating at the interfaces i.e. the boundary conditions. The idea behind the title of this book is that the study of ice composition can shed some light on the various processes operating at the ice bedrock and ice ocean interfaces and more generally on glacier dynamics. The book is not intended as a treatise on some specialized topic of glaciology. It is mainly the product of the experience of the two authors gained over several years research on the subject. The two authors are both members of the same university department and personal friends. The book was prepared in the following way: After a first draft of the complete book had been written by the first author it was put in the hands of the second. The final version sent to the publishers is therefore the result of extended discussion while at the same time preserving the unity of style that would have been lost had the two authors written selected chapters of the book individually. The book is organized into two distinct parts. ERDA, 1976
