Adaptive and Maladaptive Aspects of Developmental Stress Giovanni Laviola, Simone Macrì, 2013-01-31 Since the very early stages of life we all experience some form of stress Stressors can be mild to severe and can range from unsuccessfully longing for maternal milk in infancy to recklessly wiggling on a motorbike to being on time to watch the NBA finals on TV to breaking up a relationship All those events that we call stress have the capability of perturbing a given state of psychological and physiological equilibrium and moving it to a different level The transition from crawling to walking has to be considered a form of stress as much as losing a job It is through a continuous cross talk between environmental stressors and individual adaptations that we build our personalities and our ways to cope with daily hassles External challenges should not necessarily be regarded as bad but instead seen as constructive forces forming our ability to navigate a changing world What is stress good for What is stress bad for When and why do we need to be stressed Should we worry about stress When does stress equate to normality When does it turn into pathology We hope with this book to provide some answers to these fundamental questions

Contemporary Perspectives on Research on Child Care in Early Childhood Education Olivia Saracho, 2021-04-01 Child care environments have received extensive research attention by those interested in understanding how participating in nonparental child care might influence the children's development and learning. Throughout the United States, US Census Bureau 2011, and Europe Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development 2006, a large number of young children are cared for outside of the home by nonparental adults. Young children's nonparental care is commonly referred to as child care and is provided to children whose ages range from birth to 12 years of age. The provision of child care services has become an increasingly important part of early childhood education. In fact, the United Nations Children's Fund 2019 states that a large majority of children worldwide spend at least some of their week in child care. Such arrangements include center care, family child care in home, child care relative, child care, and supplemental child care. Child care researchers have been conducting studies to understand how participating in nonparental child care might influence the children's development and learning outcomes. There are more than enough child care studies to make numerous major inferences. For example, research outcomes show that child care quality seems to be more influential than either the kind of child care or age of admission in determining the children's development and learning. The adults in child care affect the quality of child care. In the environment, adults who are caring for the children have the opportunity to effectively assume both nurturing and instructional roles to help young children cultivate their social and cognitive abilities. The teacher's effectiveness is related to their individual characteristics such as formal education, specialized training, and the classroom environment. However, the majority of the studies show that both family and quality of child care have the most significant effects on the children's development and learning. Therefore, the concept of child care has heavily influenced modern views. Researchers, scholars, and educators are beginning to understand the current foundations based on theoretical frameworks that contribute to the purposes of the child care in the United States and Europe. The contents of the child care volume reflect the major shifts in the views of these early childhood researchers, scholars, and educators in relation to research outcomes on child care, its historical roots, the role of child care in early childhood education, and its relationship to theory, research, and practice.
