

"What—what—what are you making that noise for?" demanded the king, turning furiously to the dwarf.

The latter seemed to have recovered, in great measure, from the intoxication, and looking fixedly but quietly at the king, he merely ejaculated: "I—!?" How could it have been any other?

"The sound appeared to come from within," observed the courtiers. "I fancy it was the parrot at the window, whispering upon his cage-wires."

"True," replied the monarch, as if much relieved by the explanation; "but, on the honor of a knight, I could have sworn that I was gritting of this vagabond's teeth."

Hercupon the dwarf laughed (the king was too confident of his object to any one's laughing), and displayed a set of large, black, and very repulsive teeth. Moreover, he proved his power of swallowing as much wine as desired. The monarch was so much having drained another bumper with no very pronounced effect. Hop-Frog entered at once, and with quiet, into the room, as if at a masquerade.

"I cannot tell what was the association of ideas," observed the king, tranquilly, and as if he had never tasted wine in his life; "but, after your majesty had struck the girl and thrown her out of the window—just after your majesty had done this, and while he was making that odd noise outside the window, there came one of the capital diversion—one of my own country dances—into the room among us, at our masquerades: but here it will be no longer a masquerade, unfortunately, however, it requires a company of eight persons."

"Here we are!" cried the king, laughing at his own discovery of the coincidence; "right to a fraction—I and my wife and two courtiers. Come! what is the diversion?"

"We call it," replied the cripple, "the Eagle-Claw Dance. It is a very simple and easy thing, and it is very much enjoyed by the tongs, and it really is excellent sport if well managed."

"We will enact it," remarked the king, drawing himself up, and lowering his eyelids.

"The beauty of the game," continued Hop-Frog, "is that it is an occasion among the women."

"Capital!" roared in chorus the monarch and his courtiers.

"I will equip you as orang-outangs," promised the dwarf, "and all that to me. The resemblance shall be so striking that the king and his masqueraders will take you for real bears—and you will be as much terrified as astonished."

"Here we are!"
cried the King, laughing at his acute discovery of the coincidence
