Stamman, 1987 Monitoring of long term effects of marine pollution on regional marine ecosystems can be most useful to managers if based primarily on the use of bioindicators to monitor temporal changes in the mean background abundance of bioavailable contaminants in the region Design of successful long term regional bioindicator monitoring programs requires that specific quantitative objectives be defined and expressed as null hypotheses An optimum sampling and analysis plan designed to test these hypotheses must select the age size range and number of individuals per sample the number of samples per site the number of replicate analyses per sample and other factors based on the known sources of variance in the environment sampled population and analysis procedure Sampling sites must be systematically selected to be affected as little as possible by contaminant inputs which vary temporally on short time scales Many suitable sites will require the transplantation of bioindicators and the optimum program will probably require the exclusive use of transplanted populations Pollutant Studies In Marine Animals C. S. Giam, 2018-01-18 This volume attempts to summarize the joint efforts of a group of workers who developed systems for analysing marine pollution for use with marine animals and then use these systems to monitor certain select marine populations Approach taken is to seek pollutant induced changes in metabolite e g glutathione ascorbate concentrations in hormone concentrations in enzymes associated with pollutant metabolism e g the cytochrome P 450 mixed function oxidase system in immunological capacity and in cellular morphology The work reported here details the specific methods used and summarizes the results of measurement of the parameters in both pristine and exposed animals Not all systems exhibited changes in response to the pollutants tested these systems are also discussed here to help others avoid these potential but insensitive markers New Approaches to Monitoring Aquatic Eco-systems Terence P.
