Gray, Strategic Studies Institute, 2014-02-09 All would be strategies would benefit by some formal education However for education in strategy to be well directed it needs to rest upon sound assumptions concerning the eternal nature yet ever shifting character meaning and function of strategy as well as the range of behaviors required for effective strategic performance The author emphasizes the necessity for strategic education to help develop the strategic approach the way of thinking that can solve or illuminate strategic problems He advises that such education should not strive for a spurious relevance by presenting a military variant of current affairs He believes that the strategist will perform better in today s world if he has mastered and can employ strategy s general theory

Schools for Strategy Colin Gray, 2011-05-01 Because strategic performance must involve the ability to decide to command and to lead as well as the capacity to understand there are practical limits to what is feasible and useful by way of formal education in strategy The soldier who best comprehends what Sun tzu Clausewitz and Thucydides intended to say is not necessarily the soldier best fitted to strategic high command It is important to distinguish between intellect and character personality The superior strategist is ever uniquely a product of nature biology personality psychology and experience opportunity Nonetheless formal education has its place Strategic genius is rare strategic talent is more common though still unusual The latter can be improved by formal education the former most probably cannot However there is merit in the educational aspiration to help educate instinct for a better performance It is fortunate that genius is not strictly required in our strategists since education is apt to be unable to reach it What we do require is competence based on a talent that can be educated There is no denying that because strategy is a pragmatic creative activity the strategist well educated or not in a formal sense ideally has to know what to do how to do it and last but not least he she needs to be able to do it Obviously biology and psychology shaped by the opportunities granted by experience loom large here Professors of Strategy cannot so teach their military students that they are truly fit for purpose as strategists in action But professors can help educate the strategic judgment of those soldiers and civilians who are educable Because it is a practical real world endeavor strategy and its strategists do not have to secure a grade of excellence though that certainly is right as the ambition By its very nature our strategy has to be good enough to compete with the enemy s strategy in the whole strategic context By that I mean that even if strategy is relatively uninspired so complex is competition and war that fungibility may save us Our generals or troops or equipment or tactics might be less than stellar but somewhere amidst the myriad facets of statecraft war and warfare we might be able to locate and exploit compensating advantages Although the classroom of several kinds cannot put in what God and nature omitted it does not follow that strategy cannot be taught to good effect Any strategically educable person should have their capacity for sound and perhaps superior strategic judgment improved by intense exposure to the small canon of classic texts on general strategic theory Even though personal experience is the finest teacher there should be no denying the value in consideration of the wisdom distilled from lifelong learning by the greatest strategic minds of all time If one is unable to profit as a strategist from careful study of Sun tzu Thucydides Clausewitz and Edward N Luttwak then one should not aspire to the strategic baton unless one truly is a genius of course
