Married Women and the Law Tim Stretton, K.J. Kesselring, 2013-12-01 Explaining the curious legal doctrine of coverture William Blackstone famously declared that by marriage husband and wife are one person at law This covering of a wife's legal identity by her husband meant that the greatest subordination of women to men developed within marriage In England and its colonies generations of judges legislators and husbands invoked coverture to limit married women's rights and property but there was no monolithic concept of coverture and their justifications shifted to fit changing times Were husband and wife lord and subject Master and servant Guardian and ward Or one person at law The essays in Married Women and the Law offer new insights into the legal effects of marriage for women from medieval to modern times Focusing on the years prior to the passage of the Divorce Acts and Married Women's Property Acts in the late nineteenth century contributors examine a variety of jurisdictions in the common law world from civil courts to ecclesiastical and criminal courts By bringing together studies of several common law jurisdictions over a span of centuries they show how similar legal rules persisted and developed in different environments This volume reveals not only legal changes and the women who creatively used or subverted coverture but also astonishing continuities Accessibly written and coherently presented Married Women and the Law is an important look at the persistence of one of the longest lived ideas in British legal history Contributors include Sara M Butler Loyola Marisha Caswell Queen's Mary Beth Combs Fordham Angela Fernandez Toronto Margaret Hunt Amherst Kim Kippen Toronto Natasha Korda Wesleyan Lindsay Moore Boston Barbara J Todd Toronto and Danaya C Wright Florida
