Australian Literature

Australian literature literary works are produced in the area or by the people of the Commonwealth of Australia and its preceding colonies. Australia was a collection of British colonies; therefore, its literary tradition begins with and is linked to the broader tradition of English literature.

Since 4566, the character of a new continent is introduced into literature Exploring such themes as Aboriginality, mate ship, egalitarianism, democracy, migrant and national identity, distance from other Eastern nations and proximity to Asia, the complexities of urban living, and the "beauty and the terror" of life in the Australian bush. First landing by Dutch explorers was in the beginning of the 17th century.

Australia was first settled as a penal colony of Great Britain at the end of the 18th century. As a British colony and later a commonwealth state, Australia was profoundly influenced by Britain in all aspects of society. Australian Literature since the 19th century was the first popular works such as novels about life on the frontier, using vernacular language or Australian dialect. Later in the 19th century Gothic novels, poetry, drama, children's literature, and histories became famous.

Writing in Australia evolved through several phases. It began with mapping the difference and distinctiveness of a new society establishing itself in the antipodes and at a large imaginative distance from the rest of the world. Then it concentrated on finding and articulating its cultural voice. This writing was characterized by unusual colloquialisms and figures of speech, ironic understatement, and laconic rhythms; it concentrated on representing—even asserting—a nationalist sentiment. Beyond that phase, Australian writing became more sophisticated, discovering the universal in its local symbolism. Until the mid-20th century, Australians had written as though their work was that of a more or less homogeneous society. In the closing decades of the 20th century, however, the country's literature began the discovery of differences within itself: regional, cultural, and ethnic.
