The Lonely Way:

The Lonely Way: 1941-1976 Hermann Sasse, 2001 What would have happened if in the second century Basilidians Valentinians Marcionites and Catholics Montanists Theodotians and Modalists had had a roundtable discussion and said this For the sake of missions let us bury the war hatchet As followers of Jesus we desire nothing other than to follow the Master to build one church in which everyone may carry on his particular tradition within the realm of a common truth over against the one Lord of the one church What would have come of the church of the fourth and fifth centuries if for the sake of the mission task it had not battled through the Arian and Nestorian controversies if Arian Homousian Nestorian Monophysite Pelagian and followers of Augustine had allowed themselves simply to be united in one great ecclesiastical communion This question is posed in order to find the only answer which can be given to it Today the church would simply no longer exist The church would have been ruined Just as a man whose kidneys no longer eliminate poisons which have accumulated in the body will die so the church will die which no longer eliminates heresy Book jacket
